DAILY LEADER

Jeff. Davis' Son in Sontreal. A Montreal correspondent of the New York Hould thus describes the performances of a non of Jeff. Dayle in that city ances of a non of Jeff. Day's in that city:

Among the recent arrivals here, were the three children, mother in-law and servant of Jeff. Dayle. They put up at the Donegama filedel, and caused quits a little exetement during their stay. Your readers the already familiar with the preserval of the family, the age of each, and their pecultarities. I shall not, therefore, attempt to describe them, but merely misses a few

It was their costom to est at the public table along with the other guests of the stablishment. The little boy, about nine years old, was very tallative and noisy, the feeling was very tallative and noisy, the feeling was to be kicked up as much notice and furs at the Donegans as his paternal relative did on a large scale during the relation. At meals he was constantly gabbing in a load wites, and finding facility with everything placed before him on the table, and with the servants. Within he table, and with the servants. Within he table, and of much spirit and originality of thought and expension.

"I say, sigger," said he one day to one of his colored servants, "I wish you could bring me some contact."
